PREFACE

By any standard, Tom Mann was one of the most remarkable personalities the British working-class movement has ever produced: notable for the length of his involvement in positions of leadership, the variety of his roles and activities, and the force of his influence. He won respect and affection as an activist who was passionate yet tolerant, flamboyant yet unpretentious, cultured yet down-to-earth.

Mann was born in Coventry in April 1856 - one month after the end of the Crimean War, and with Lord Palmerston at the height of his political ascendancy. He died in March 1941, three months before the Soviet Union entered the Second World War. (For a fervent anti-militarist, the timing was ironical.) His long life bridged the early phase of the dominance of British industry and the British empire, and far more modern patterns of industrial and international relations. For some six decades, he was in the public eye as he strove to articulate and inspire a working-class response to the challenges which these world-historical transformations engendered.

Like so many of his generation, Mann enjoyed minimal schooling and commenced work at the age of nine; but evening classes and the public libraries helped him become a deeply cultivated autodidact, able to deliver spell-binding lectures on a bewildering range of topics. Erudition was combined, however, with oratorical flair and an easy rapport with working-class audiences.

Mann was an outstanding trade union agitator and organiser. A skilled engineer, he challenged the conservative leadership of his own union, almost gained election as general secretary in 1892, and was successful with a much later attempt in 1919. He won far greater fame, however, as one of the leaders of the London dock strike of 1889, becoming president of the Dockers' Union. He also helped found a diversity of other unions during his career, and proclaimed the doctrine of militancy and solidarity across almost every industry.

For Mann, trade union and political activities were inseparable. In 1884 he became a rising star in the newly-formed Social-Democratic Federation, later worked with the Fabian Society, was secretary of the Independent Labour Party for four years in the 1890s, became the most prominent British syndicalist in the turbulent years before the 1914 war, and in 1920 helped found the British Communist Party, remaining a member until his death.

His career was international. In the 1890s he helped establish what is today the International Transport Workers' Federation, serving as its first president. In this role he visited many European countries, more than once spending time in police cells prior to deportation. His trade union and political work took him to America, Africa and Asia. He spent the first decade of the century working and agitating in Australia and New Zealand. As a communist he was prominent in a number of international committees and gatherings, and made five extended visits to Moscow.

Mann regarded himself as a revolutionary and subversive - and many of those in authority agreed. He was sentenced to terms of imprisonment on several occasions; the last in 1932 (at the age of 75) when he was gaoled for three months, under an obscure act of 1817, for his participation in unemployed demonstrations. Yet in some ways he displayed the deep respectability of the Victorian aristocrat of labour; he was appointed a member of a Royal Commission in 1891; and at one point he was considered for ordination in the Anglican church.

Tom Mann was thus a complex and contradictory figure, in so many respects appearing larger than life. An adequate understanding of his career, and of the transformations which shaped him and which he in turn helped form, requires familiarity with a wide range of historical material. This bibliography - in many ways complementing the two recently published biographies of Mann - is an invaluable aid both to scholars and to those inspired to learn more of Mann's life and times.

John Bennett and Alastair Tough are to be congratulated on this achievement. For assistance with this project, thanks are due to the Modern Records Centre at the University of Warwick, and its archivist Richard Storey; to the staff of the Tom Mann Centre, Coventry; and to Ruth and Edmund Frow, who have done so much to preserve the record of pioneers like Tom Mann.

Primary sources relating to the life of Tom Mann

The two most important sources of information about relevant papers are: the National Register of Archives\textsuperscript{1}; and Cook, C., Sources in British Political History, 1900-51\textsuperscript{2}. The entry on Mann in the National Register of Archives refers to two archives: the Herbert Samuel Papers in the House of Lords Record Office\textsuperscript{3}; and, the John Burns Papers in the British Library\textsuperscript{4}. The entry on Mann in Cook, C., Sources in British Political History, 1900-51, vol.5 'A Guide to the Private Papers of Selected Writers, Intellectuals and Publicists', 1978, in addition to mentioning these archives, notes the existence of relevant papers in the State Library of Victoria, Australia.

Secondary sources were very useful in suggesting possible locations of additional primary source material for a study of Mann's long and eventful career. Torr, D., Tom Mann, Lawrence and Wishart, 1944, contains a chronological summary of Mann's life from which an outline was prepared with a view to searching out relevant archives. This seemed a particularly appropriate search strategy in view of the episodic nature of Mann's life. Those enquiries which proved fruitless are included in the hope that researchers may be saved from wasting their time.

1888 Mann assisted in the formation of the National Union of Gasworkers and General Labourers.

Cook, C., op. cit. (vol.1), states that reports and balance sheets of this union have survived from 1889 onwards. Mann's contribution may, therefore, not be recorded. Both the name of the union and the address for enquiries about its archives have changed since Cook's book appeared. These are now: General, Municipal, Boilermakers and Allied Trades Union; and, Director of Studies, GMB National College, College Road, Manchester M16 8BP.

1889 Mann was a leading organiser of the great London Dock Strike and subsequently became President of the newly formed Dock, Wharf, Riverside and General Workers Union (the 'Dockers' Union').

Correspondence in the Burns papers, mentioned above as featuring in the NRA, relates to this episode. In addition, the surviving records of the Dockers' Union which were deposited in the Modern Records Centre by the TGWU are relevant. The early records consist entirely of printed materials but these include Mann's presidential addresses to the Union's annual congresses in 1890-2 and 1895\textsuperscript{5}. Letters from Mann to Hon. Sydney Holland re the Dockers' Union and the former's candidature for the General Secretaryship of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers are preserved in the Tom Mann Centre, Coventry.

1890 Mann was active (and successful) in pressing for the participation of the London Trades Council in the first London May Day demonstration. Cook, C., op. cit. (vol.1), states that records of the Trades Council including its minute books for this period are deposited in the TUC Library. A microform edition of these records was published by World Microfilms in 1970.

1891-4 Mann served on the Royal Commission on Labour.
As well as the Commission's reports, a considerable quantity of oral and written evidence was published contemporaneously in the form of Command papers. These and contemporary publications regarding the Royal Commission are listed in Bain, G. and Woolven, G.B., Bibliography of British industrial relations. Unpublished evidence and the correspondence of its secretary should be available in the Public Record Office.

1894-6 General Secretary/organiser of the Independent Labour Party.
The ILP's archives have been published in microform by Harvester Press Microform Publications Ltd. Series 3 'The correspondence of Francis Johnson, 1888-1950' includes incoming letters addressed to Tom Mann as General Secretary. The archive has been deposited in the British Library of Political and Economic Science at the London School of Economics.

1896-8 Founder, organiser and President of the International Federation of Ship, Dock and Riverside Workers: banned and/or deported from a number of European countries for trade union organising activities.
This federation was the predecessor of the International Transport Workers Federation (ITWF), which has deposited its archives in the Modern Records Centre. Surviving records relevant to Mann's involvement include: copies of letters sent by Mann to Samuel Gompers; letters from Mann received by Charles Lindley in Sweden; and printed conference reports and ephemera. The archives of several nations may contain files on Mann's activities and deportations.

1898 Leading founder-organiser of the Workers' Union.
The surviving records of the Workers' Union have been deposited in the Modern Records Centre by the TGWU. They contain nothing relating to the Union's foundation and early development. However, the ITWF archive contains one letter written by Mann as Vice-President of the WU re organisation of clay workers, 1912.

1901-10 During this period Tom Mann was in Australasia. He was founder member of the Socialist Party of Australia and organised a major strike at the Broken Hill mine.
Primary sources in Australia relating to this episode may be traced in the Guide to Collections of Manuscripts relating to Australia, National Library of Australia, Canberra. A copy of this multi-volume, loose-leaf format Guide is available for consultation in London at the National Register of Archives. It indicates the existence of correspondence with Mann in the papers of John Jones and Robert Ross and in the archives of the Industrial Workers of the World Club of Sydney.
The archives of the International Transport Workers Federation contain a letter from Mann re his Australian activities\textsuperscript{15}.

1910-11 Mann played a leading role in the foundation of the National Transport Workers' Federation [NTWF]. He became a NTWF organiser in Liverpool and was a leading figure in the 1911 transport workers' strike there. A series of printed reports of this Federation from 1911 onwards forms part of the TGWU archives in the Modern Records Centre. These, however, contain no major references to Mann. Likewise, duplicated copies of the Federation's Executive Council minutes from 1912 onwards, which are preserved in the ITWF archives, contain no major references to Mann. An ITWF file of correspondence with the NTWF does, however, contain a handbill issued in Liverpool during the 1911 strike, bearing marginalia by Mann\textsuperscript{16}.

1914 Following a bitter industrial dispute between the South African mining companies and the predominantly British unions of their white employees, Mann returned to South Africa, which he had visited in 1910. It is understood that the Government Archive Service in Pretoria holds some relevant files.

1914-17 Organiser for the National Sailors and Firemen's Union in Liverpool. The archives of this union have been deposited by its successor, the National Union of Seamen, in the Modern Records Centre. The minute books show that Mann attended meetings of the Union's national executive committee during this period\textsuperscript{17}. He was present for the last time when the action of the Union in refusing to allow peace delegates to embark en route for Petrograd was discussed.

1916 & 1920 In 1916 Mann joined the British Socialist Party and in 1920 he joined the newly-formed Communist Party, of which the former was a major constituent. The entries on the Communist Party and the Marx Memorial Library in Cook, C., \textit{op. cit} (vol.1), indicate the nature of the surviving source material on these two political parties.

1919-21 General Secretary of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers: major role in the creation of the Amalgamated Engineering Union. The archives of the ASE/ AEU have been deposited in the Modern Records Centre. For the period in question they consist principally of Executive Council minutes. These record Tom Mann's presence at AEU meetings from July 1920 to April 1921\textsuperscript{18}. Unfortunately the last minute books of the ASE, for the period from January 1918 to June 1920, appear to have been lost before the archive was deposited at Warwick University. Conference proceedings and other printed items have been retained by the union. The John Burns papers mentioned above also contain relevant correspondence.

1924-32 Chairman of the National Minority Movement.
Cook, C., op.cit. (vols. 1 & 6), gives details of surviving primary source material.

1891-1938 Some postcards and five letters written by Tom Mann form the "Tom Mann collection" in the Working Class Movement Library. These have no common subject matter and many consist of brief greetings and/or good wishes.

1893-1904 Six letters from Mann to Ben Tillett survive in a small group of Tillett papers in the Modern Records Centre. Topics include Mann's interest in the church and differences of opinion between him and Tillett.
